

Sunday – March 17 – Lake Murray Church – 10:30 am

God does not see things the way we see them. We are limited in this natural world to see only what our senses will allow. Even the most gifted human beings see only a finite fraction of what God sees. When we compare the nature of God with the nature of humanity, there really is no way we can measure the difference. God sees infinitely beyond anything we could ever imagine.

What if God would give us a little clue as to what he sees in this world? He did just that. One day Jesus was standing with his disciples as he looked at the crowds of people that surrounded him. The disciples saw the crowds too, but not with the same eyes. Jesus saw with eyes filled with the compassion of the Savior. “When he saw the crowds, he had compassion on them, because they were harassed and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd” (Matthew 9:36).

What did Jesus do next? He turned to his disciples and shared his vision. “The harvest is plentiful, but the workers are few. Ask the Lord of the harvest, therefore, to send out workers into his harvest fields” (Matthew 9:37-38). Today, Jesus would share his vision with each of us.
